

BRI INQUIRYComments of Mrs Diane Kennington
On the statement of Reverend Peter BrowneParagraph 22

I agree that I had a heavy workload, but it was never so great that I was not able to give the appropriate support to families, to enable them or arrange or assist them with the practical arrangements for funerals, obtaining the death certificate etc. I should emphasise that it is not and was not part of my role to provide counselling to bereaved families. This is something which I feel should be left to the excellent professional services; a list of these is given in the bereavement booklet which I hand out to the relatives, so that they can contact one of the organisations if and when they feel the need to.
